

Join Bonnitta Roy in a participatory workshop Tuesday March 29th The Promise of Open Participatory Organization

How do you infuse the agile mind-set into the organizational structures so that you create an organizational architecture that learns and develops? Many organizations today are trying to adapt agile principles. They often succeed within teams or departments, but when scaling it through the whole organization they often fail. In this workshop, you will explore how to build an open participatory organization that goes beyond «being agile».

The Center for Transformative Leadership invites you to a workshop with Bonnitta Roy March 29th in Trondheim. In this workshop, Bonnitta will share her insight, experience and enthusiasm about Open Participatory Organizations (OPO) and Applied Participatory Practices (APP). OPO is a set of organizational architecture principles releasing learning and growth in an organization, and is the next generation practices for innovative and dynamic organizations.

Before lunch, you will get a general orientation and experience of the applied participatory practices, and after lunch, we will dive deeper into how to take this into your organization. You are welcome to participate only in the first half of the day.

About Bonnitta Roy and APP Associates

Bonnitta Roy is an award-winning author, philosopher, co-editor of Integral Review and founder of APP Associates. APP Associates develops practical applications, such as organizational templates, facilitation and assessment tools to support the transition to new ways of organizational life.

“We are reinventing what it means to participate, by experimenting with self-organizing teams that continually renew their passion, ignite their enthusiasm, and activate their imagination in collaborative ways of working together.”
